ACTIVITY NO. 1 PIVOT CHARTS

1. PROCEDURE OUTPUT

What procedures did you perform?

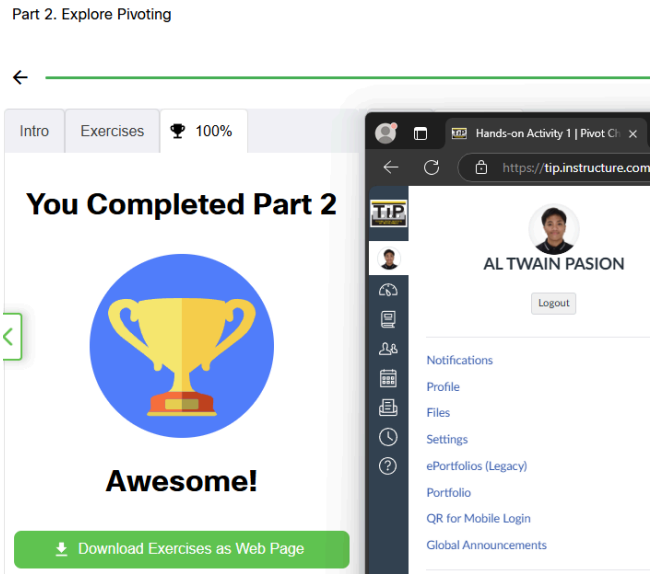

PART 1

LEARNINGS:

There's a bunch of things I learned from this activity, but the most valuable one is characteristics. We can organize data based on the sample's properties. For example, a shirt and a car may be too far of a category on their own, but if they were the same color we can put them together in one category.

LEARNINGS:

This activity has way more data than the previous. The difference I noticed is that we organize the data based on the values of the samples, like the country's population, how many moons are in the planets, and etc. By utilizing these values, pivot charts can neatly organize the data and is easily interpretable.

2. ANSWERS TO SUPPLEMENTAL ACTIVITY

Copy and paste the questions from the lab and include your answers after.

LEARNINGS:

The biggest part I noticed is that this activity consists of user-inputted data and also combines the idea of both part-1 and part-2.Having charts display ratings is a very good choice, but also there is a term called “human error”. We saw in the data that the children would rate everything a “5”, this could lead to data inaccuracy but it is normal when surveys are involved in data gathering.
